What Have You Collected?

A spiritual teacher, the late Mornnah Simeona, of The Foundation of I, who had updated the ho'oponopono process, mentioned once that if you collect anything, it represents something from your family tree. Personally, I found that a little disturbing because I used to collect trolls. Although I collected the tabletop version, these were the type of troll I collected. This I took at Epcot in the Norway exhibit.

My mother, on the other hand, was a big collector of deer, swans and tigers.

The latter two pictured here I took while at Animal Kingdom last week. No one has ever verified what Morrnah had said so I can't tell you if true. But, I have never looked at anyone and what they collected the same again!

This was a black and white swan, which I have never seen before. However, Lakeland is known for swan. They have black swans as well as white. But, I have never seen a black and white one as shown here.

Animals do reincarnate and people have had past-life memories as animals, including me. Years ago I had a memory of being a large cat in a past life, which surprised me. I don't know, however, if it was a tiger. It came up when clearing a back problem. I went through a series of lifetimes when something happened to my back. In this instance, one cat had clawed my back. Considering we can incarnate in different positions within the same family tree, who knows if I was part of the same family tree?!

So what have you collected?

When I speak to clients, sometimes their animals communicate past lives they want cleared. It's quite surprising because it wasn't something I ever thought happened or that I could do. They have sometimes told me about the past lives they shared with their current owner. It's fascinating what I have learned from doing sessions with clients and being able to recall past lives or speak to someone's soul and have them share the information.

It is during sessions when I have often discovered a new gift. I didn't know I could communicate with animals until they started speaking up when on the phone with my client. Because my client is more familiar with their behavior, they notice the difference when the animal comes into the room or reacts differently when we are doing our session.

It's amazing how much the animal knows about what is going on in the household. They sometimes can share the cause of their owner's problem. They have even made suggestions as to what to clear during a session.

And, to a very special dog who communicates with me regularly, I'm sending you my regards. His family asked me last week what to do as it appeared to be near the end and they didn't want him to suffer. The dog said he did not want to be put down. They didn't and his family reported his health improved. BK, I'm glad you are still with us!

So, if you have any animals, you might want to see what they may have to say this weekend. I would love to hear your stories!

Wishing you have a wonderful weekend,

Joy
