God Versus Religion

It is not my intent with this article to offend any of you who love your religion. By shedding some light on this touchy subject, my intent is to hopefully bridge a gap between you and God which has often been created due to some misunderstandings.

Have you ever found it confusing why there are so many religions? Have you ever wondered why so many differences amongst them? Why could one religion believe one thing about God and another be so completely different if one God? Some religious teachings have taught that you can kill others, and others have taught that God said, "Thou shall not kill". Which tactic do you think is more Godlike, killing or saving your fellow man? There are so many questions, doubts and concerns about both religion, as well as God.

A good place to start is separating God and religion. Religion is often about God but God may not necessarily be behind all of it's creation, intention, teachings and rules.

Religion is an organization outside of you. God is within you. Religion is something you can choose to participate in. God comes within you whether you like it or not, accept it or not.

In my assignment to clear the cause of humanity's karma to set you free, I often had to clear issues within religions. Remember it was man usually running the show. The focus may have been about God, but the rules were often influenced by man's perspective and the culture of the times.

When going back in history, which I often do in my client sessions to clear the cause of issues, I am able to see what actually occurred at the time. For example, I was taken to a meeting that occurred in the early creation of Christianity where men were discussing and deciding which of the Jewish Laws they wanted to keep.

Another example was that man decided at one point to leave the subject of reincarnation out of the Bible to serve their ability to control others. It was not left out of all Bibles because the Egyptians left it in theirs.

I have also witnessed where a Biblical scribe was put to death for not altering the Bible to suit that leader's preference at the time.

I have often cleared stories written about in the Bible and see a different vantage point than was written about. Remember all is conveyed from the perspective of the writer.

What people often don't realize is how much darkness manipulated many situations, religions and religious leaders to create fear of God, as well as separation from God.

Some religions taught you had to follow them or go through them to get to God. Why do you suppose that was necessary if God was within you, which has also been taught? Keep in mind it was the goal of darkness to build a wedge between you and God.

Why would you be taught to fear God if he was a part of you? If he was inside of you, it would be rather difficult to separate yourself from him unless by a lack of awareness he was within as your operating system.

Some taught God won't speak to you so if you hear him, it is really the devil. Who would benefit from that teaching? Most fathers I know would like to be heard by their children. Remember that religion is a big target for darkness to sabotage people from having a personal relationship with God. They fight the light. I'm grateful to have not received the instruction that God can't speak to you because we've been dialoging for years. His messages come with great love and useful guidance. Wouldn't you benefit from having direct messages from Source who knows why you are here and how to achieve your heart's desires most easily?

I loved the message God delivered to our group healing call earlier this month stating you are alive because he is within and when you die it is because he removed his energy from you. That would mean that if you are alive, God is within and wanting you to be here. What religion, if of God, then would tell you to kill someone else who also had God within?

Again, this isn't necessarily about bashing religion. What it is more about is the concern that many have turned away from God because of what they have been taught from a religion, such as God is someone to fear, or that he would direct killing another. Discernment is key. Aligning with God does not mean you have to align with religious doctrine. It doesn't mean you can't align with a religion either. But learn to discern between the two and know God personally rather than what has been taught by others who may or may not know God personally. Question God. Have God show you the truth. You may be following rules created long ago that may not serve your highest good. Ask God, who can actually guide you to your highest good. He will never steer you wrong and will always take in the good of the all.

I remember speaking to a minister who admitted he does not know God. But, he was teaching about a subject that was only intellectual. I am blessed to know God personally and he's pretty terrific. He is a great ally and resource that benefits me tremendously. When you align with the great power within you, possibilities expand for you. But, often many are blocked from receiving all the goodies from God because of unconscious issues often taught by religions either from this lifetime or others. Just look at all the persecution that has gone on due to religion. Persecution is not of God. God is more loving and less judgmental than any person I have ever met.

Think about who will help bring you to where you want to go the most? A religion or God? Maybe both. It would largely depend on their teachings and methods. Go with what is aligned in the highest light, that serves your soul and has your best interest at heart. God, as your operating system, will certainly have your best interest at heart. He lives through you.

Even Jesus said, "you can't have an intimate relationship with someone you fear." If you fear God, you can't receive the enormous benefits he provides. I often clear that fear from the subconscious of clients and they may not even realize it is there from many former teachings about God, hell, judgment day, etc. taught by religion. If you knew God personally, you would realize that none of the above is anything to fear. But, I likely need to elaborate as to specifics on those topics in another newsletter so you understand them better. The goal is to set you free from the constraints within your subconscious that may be holding you back without your even realizing it.

May you have the blessings provided by God, your greatest power within.

Much love,
Joy
